

Have you re-used a figure?

Not published elsewhere previously

If the figure has been reused but has not been previously published you will need to seek permission from the original author where possible.

Journal/Book

If the figure has been taken from another journal or book then you will need the publisher's permission in order to reuse it. In most cases permission can be obtained by going to the article's page online and clicking on a link for Permissions or Copyright. Otherwise permissions can be obtained through RightsLink.

Wikipedia

Please let us know if any of your images and figures have been taken from Wikipedia or Wikimedia. You will need to provide us with a link to the exact page the image was taken from. We can then check if the image is free to use in the public domain or if permission is needed.

Open Access

If a figure comes from an Open Access article you will still need to cite it correctly in your reference list and your figure captions, including the name of OA licence applied. Permission is not required if an article was published under either the CC BY or CC BY-SA licence, citation will still be needed. Any other OA licence means you will need to check with the publisher to obtain permission. Because IOP Publishing is a commercial entity, permission will still be needed for OA papers with any of the following licences; CC BY-NC, CC BY-NC-SA, CC BY-NC-ND, CC BY-ND.
